

Identifying Potential Barriers: Think big. Start small. Act fast. Entrepreneurs are action oriented, and they tend to focus their time and energy on things they can change rather than on things they cannot. What is preventing you from taking the steps necessary to accomplish your goals? Are the barriers external, such as lack of knowledge, resources, time, and money? Or are they internal barriers such as complacency, fear, or a lack of confidence? What actions can you take to overcome these perceived barriers?

I think personally I hold myself back internally through shame, lack of confidence, and fear. I think I underestimate my worth and worthiness of success because I have been blessed in many ways. I've had a very interesting hand dealt to me in life and I have had some challenging times from family chaos to rejection to physical disability. My father did not see me as enough growing up as I relentlessly tried to prove my worth last time I saw him I was 10. I firmly believe experiencing hard times is essential to life and development of character. I do have experience in sales, marketing, and coordinating shoots, but I am still young (20) so my experience so far has been with help. I've spent a lot of time thinking my way through my childhood, but I think I have some stuff to figure out in therapy. I've also experienced a great fulfillment from volunteering at the mission. In conclusion I think my barriers as of now are primarily internal; fear, self-doubt, shame and some external; lack of solo experience, the actions I could take to address my internal barriers are therapy and volunteering, for the external lack of experience I could offer free or discounted services to upcoming local brands to gain experience and to gain a potential future client.
